God bless you!

I had an opportunity to visit one of our local hospitals this past week and I was again impressed by the number of staff bustling about intensive care and focusing their time and talents upon a few really in need. This past Sunday we took an opportunity to let you know how your time and talent are represented in the weekly donations you offer to Sacred Heart. I have to just thank you again...I am so proud of the special ministries we as a community are engaged in and I love to brag about you around these outreaches.

A pride in who we are makes me smilingly welcome visitors to experience us in the weekend liturgies. And this week I so look forward to welcoming a few into our RCIA classes – those who are eager to join our faith community. You know, these classes can also be enjoyed by anyone wishing to better understand and deepen their faith. Call if you are interested.

Speaking of interest, there has certainly been some around the changes in the New Roman Missal. The Catholic Northwest Progress for September 29th and this week's bulletin insert outline a few of these changes – the whole effort really meant to offer us ways to celebrate more meaningfully. I for one am looking forward to how our Mass and Liturgies might come even more alive!

This whole past week has offered one invitation after another in the readings at Mass, invitations to “come alive” by being merciful and forgiving; Jesus teaching us how to pray in a way that if we really mean it and do it boldly, change for the better is a certainty!

Several days ago, after Mass, a five year old came up to greet me with his parents. He boldly offered his hand and said: “My name is Stephen.” I sensed in his eyes and manner a pride in himself and in the family from which he came. We gave each other welcoming smiles as did his parents. And we parted with the sense of “it would be enjoyable to celebrate with you again.”

I'll be back. May we all come back into each other's lives in ways meaningful and with promise! We will attract others and do great things as well. So who will you give a welcoming smile to this day?

Enjoy! Forgive! Pray! Smile! God bless you all!
